EMBLEM

The division of the field into two parts alludes to the time periods in a 24-hour day; the light blue with clouds indicates day and the deep blue represents night. Together, they indicate the 24-hour continuous communications service provided by the squadron. The red lightning flash extending across the sphere to the gold rim indicates the squadron's instant worldwide communications capabilities and denotes assignment to the Strategic Air Command. The gold and blue lightning flash extending across the sphere indicates the excellence and professionalism required of assigned Air Force personnel. These flashes also allude to the four points of the compass, and with the red lightning flash, signify the squadron's numerical designation. The emblem bears the national colors and the Air Force colors—golden yellow and ultramarine blue.
